

Fung Shui Meets the Mountains of West VA at Wild Rock

February 2,
2011 published by Tom
Wagner

Search for:

Latest Posts

Fung Shui Meets the Mountains of West VA at Wild Rock

Amazing Winter Views From Wild Rock

Wild Rock Serves as National Park Training Area for Park Rangers

Halloween Fun at Wild Rock

31st Bridge Day a Success

This posting will be in the first of an exciting story of how Wild Rock's first sustainable home came to life. In early 2009, Wild Rock's Carl Frischkorn, began the process of designing a state-of-the-art sustainable home that would set the standard for the community.

Construction of this modern home began in June of 2009 on lot 6 of Peregrine Ridge at Wild Rock and was completed in August 2010. The owner chose a modern design in a wooded setting to help demonstrate how a modern home can conform to a sustainable community and compliment natural landforms. Sustainability was a goal from the start and the process included a Feng Shui analysis, as well as an energy audit and constant evaluation of construction techniques, materials, systems and process.

Cecilia Hernandez of Formwork Design LLC www.formwork-architect.com in Charlottesville VA designed the house and was the architect of record.

Alex Stark of www.alexstark.com of NYC was the Feng Shui consultant.